CHAPTER XII.

I was quite ill the next morning-from excitement, I suppose. Anyhow, I did not get up, and there wasn't any breakfast. Jim said he roused Flannigan at 8 o'clock, to go down and get the fire started, and then went back to bed. But Flannigan did not get up. The result was, naturally, that the old lady wouldn't let Bella out of her sight, fina (oh, yes; the doctor could come in; nothing going out") and she had three pints of Bass, and learned to eat anchovies and caviare-all in one day.

Bella's conduct to Jim was disgrace-She snubbed him, ignored him, tramped on him, and Jim was growing positively flabby. He spent most of his time writing letters to the board of health and playing solitaire. He was a pathetic figure.

Well, we went to bed fairly early. Bella had massaged Aunt Selina's face and rubbed in cold cream, Anne and Dallas had compromised on which window should be open in their bedroom, and the men had matched to see who should look at the furnace. I did not expect to sleep, but the cold night air had done its work, and I was asleep almost im mediately.

Some time during the early part of the night I wakened, and, after turning and twisting uneasily, I realized that I was ting an eiderdown comfort that was folded at my feet, and pulling it up around me. In the luxury of its wormth I snuggled down and went to sleep alm stantly. It seemed to me I had slept for hours, but it was probably an he or less, when something roused me. And then came the incident that in its ghastly, horrible absurdity made the rest of the people shout with laughter the next day. It was not funny then. For suddenly the elderdown comfort began I heard no footstep, not the slightest sound approaching me, but the comfort moved; from my chin, inch by nch, it slipped to my shoulders; awfully, hair-raisingly it moved. I could feel my blood gather around my heart, leaving me cold and nerveless. As it passed my hands I gave an involun-tary clutch for it, to feel it slip away from my fingers. Then the full horro of the situation took hold of me; as the comfort slid past my feet I sat up and screamed at the top of my voice. Of course, people came running in in all sorts of things. I was still sitting up, de-claring I had seen a ghost and that the

MORNING CHIT-CHAT.

GROUP of us, of which a newspaper artist was one, were discussing things journalistic the other day and the conversation turned upon the work of several of his brother artists. With each one who was named he had some fault to find.

The technique of the first was "rotten." The faces that the second drew had no expression,

The third had no sense of motion. The fourth was a fairly decent draftsman, but didn't have a real snappy idea once a month.

And so on. Now, all these criticisms may have been absolutely fair and just. I am not enough of an artist to judge whether they were or not. But even if they were absolutely merited, that could not prevent the instinctive feeling that swept over all of us that this man was jealous of the men he criticised. Never run down the achievements of any one in the same line of

It doesn't pay If you must show your critical ability, show it in regard to some kind of work that you do not do, for otherwise, no matter how justifiable your criticisms may be, you will always run the risk of arousing in your hearers the antagonistic feeling, "He is jealous!" The feeling may be entirely unjust and unfounded. I grant that. But unjust or not, it is a feeling that it pays to avoid rousing when it can be done so easily as by keeping one's mouth shut at the proper time.

A young teacher came to me the other day highly indignant. "Some of the folks from my some town," she announced, "asked me what I thought of Ruth as a teacher. I don't like her methods at all, so I just said so, and explained where I thought she was wrong, and now I hear I am terribly jealous of Ruth's success. Now, isn't that unjust, when they asked me themselves?"

"Yes." I admitted. "unjust but inevitable." What else could I have said but what I thought, when they came and asked me?" indignantly. 'Isn't Ruth good in some things?" I asked. 'Yes, but I told them her good points," hotly.

"Well, couldn't you have stopped there?" "But that wouldn't have been telling the whole truth," argumenta-

"Need one always tell everything one knows and thinks, in order to be truthful?"

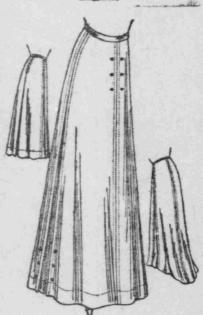

"No-o," thoughtfully, "I suppose not, but I wasn't jealous. They asked what I thought and I told them." That's the way we all feel when we try to be honest critics of our fellow-workers.

But that also is the way we are all apt to get judged. And I don't think it If it ever becomes necessary to judge a brother workman's output for some one who desires to know its value with a view to purchase, one must, of course, speak of defects as well as merits. But under any other conditions it seems to me it is far better from a purely utilitarian, as well as a moral, standpoint to speak what good one can and then lock one's lips. RUTH CAMERON.

LADIES' FOUR-GORE SKIRT. Paris Pattern No. 3299 All Seams Allowed.

With separate skirts as much worn as they are this season a new model is always welcome. In our illustration we show one which has several points of novelty about it. The small number of pieces means that it will be found simple to construct, and the four gores allow it to be made of either wide or narrow materials. The skirt has four gores and at the center of the front and back the cloth is turned back and stitched to give the effect of a slot seam. At each side is a real slot seam, with a strip of material sewed underneath the turned-back edges of the material. A skirt of this description will be excellent in Panama, brilliantine, pongee, linen or gingham of good quality. It will be suitable for either long or short skirts and may be trimmed with buttons or braid or both, or it may be entirely untrimmed. The pattern is cut in 6 sizes, 22 to 32 inches waist measure. To make the skirt in the medium size will require 4 yards of material 36 inches wide

FROM WOMAN'S POINT OF VIEW.

"The ugliest woman in Paris" is going to have a tremendous influence upon impressionable American women-and most Americans are impressionable - because her success is placing a premium upon ugliness. Heretofore women have waged untiring war against it, because beauty has had the best of everything and hope lessly ugly women have simply ceased to even try to please in other directions. There is this to be said of the self-confessed ugliest woman; she is enormously clever and magnetic. She has achieved fame wholly by that, for she made herself unique. Her ugly followers will not duplicate her popularity, because they will probably lack the qualities which make the public gasp and swallow something hat cannot be palatable. It is not thing hat cannot be palatable. It is not possib, that a beauty-loving world can do more than gasp and swallow under such conditions.

The grotesque on the stage has always held a fascination for theater lovers, Facetious grave-diggers would not be tolerated in real life, where nothing humorous is found in marital infidelity or nagging mothers - in - law. These are tragedies which help to support lawyers and courts. One ugly woman may be popular because of her novelty, but an army of them would make life hideous, so women will do well to stick to their little devices to appear attractive.

If one woman can induce us to avoid pinching the feet and worrying over the effect of honest labor upon the hands, she will be a real missionary. If she shows us the way to blind the world to physical defects by mental beauty or strength or a ombination of both, she will have done all that mortal can expect. A knowledge of defects is usually depressing to the average woman, and possibly the sight of one who can be oblivious of such matters would be inspiring.

In any event, it is to be hoped that we are not to be overwhelmed by a wave of unnecessary ugliness. Last Sunday I heard a man describe the three most satisfactory pictures to the eye to be a pretty woman, a thoroughbred horse, and a graceful yacht, and he was just an everyday man of good, hard sense. He may have sufficient curiosity to take one view of the ugliest woman of the times, but he would not like to have her continually would not like to under foot, I am sure.

Some Practical Lingerie Hats. From the Millinery Trade Review

There are practical lingerie hats, made of embroidered flouncing or allover, and there are smart shirt-waist hats of embroidered linen, duck, and crash, which come under the pressed-hat category, and may or may not be faced or partially made of straw. Grass cloth and batavia embroidered and plain lends itself to many clever designs. It may be pleated with good effect, and is very smart when used with bright cherry color or chantecler velvet ribbon, king's blue, or green. Sallors, banded and trimmed, are strong in coarse straws, such as jumbo and pineapple, and the question of whether the straight, turned-down, or turned-up linen worked with white cotton. These two, mounted upon tissue parts of the frill is pressed into pleats) and boxed makes a most attractive little gift and represents hours well spent.
